going to be more trading between the Democratic factions than was ever known before. The National and State committees have been doing their best to stop the fight, but each faction is going to save itself in local politics at the expense of the National and in some justances the State ticket. It is whispered around to-night that each Democratic faction would be supplied at the polls with Republican electoral ballots. That these electoral ballots would be bunched with the Democratic State and faction city tickets, and that State and faction city tickets, and that the district managers had received word o trade a Democratic vote for a Repub-ican electoral ticket wherever a Republican electoral ticket wherever a Republican vote could be secured for one of the factions' city ticket. The Democratic managers got wind of this scheme early this evening and have been doing everything to prevent its being carried out. So far their efforts have been without avail.
